

For my final project, I would like to create a letter addressing a problem that has plagued me at FIU since I transferred over from my prior college. Every classroom I have attended lacks one of the most important things that I need which is a left-handed desk. I have yet to see one left-handed desk and it has become quite annoying especially when taking notes that require the use of books. Because of this, I wish to address this problem to whoever might be able to control the number of left-handed desks in circulation and would use the medium of either a letter or another format such as a finely addressed complaint. By addressing this issue, I will be showing awareness of the problem that a minority amount of students face as a nuisance. Being left-handed requires you to live in a right-handed world and objects such as desks, tools, musical instruments, and among other things become scarce and rather expensive. For this, I plan on tackling the subject with the use of rhetoric and how it influences most of the world to be right-handed in the way of everything. I think writing about this topic will show an interesting perspective within the rhetorical sphere that is not commonly addressed. I am not too sure what form or subject of rhetoric I plan to use for this but I will have the use of code-switching as one of the elements of it. I can also use bias and show how prevalent it is when people are unaware of it due to not being affected.
